T. G. DAVIS' COLUMN.
I wish to advise all whom it may concern, that I represent the following strong stock Cos., with an aggregate capital of $17,000,000: Fire, life, accident and Marine, and as I make insurance a specialty, I am in a better position to cater to the public wants, than those who do not. I ask no premium notes for [illegible] the premium, but insure on the cash system. Will accept first-class dwelling risks and contents at 75c. per $100 for three years, and where a responsible man needs 30 days to pay premium, can accommodate such, and no money asked before policy is delivered. Then why not consult your own interests and insure at once? Don't delay; an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Any party wishing to consult me can drop me a postal card, call at the Campbell House or at the office of [illegible], Napanee, where I will be happy to meet them and save their money.

By the River.

Some laugh and dance through all their day,
[illegible] across their way,
For some the wintry years drag down,
For some the skies grow gray;
The strong heart beats the weak heart down
In life's amalgamation;
The good and bad are all as one,
The rich man's gall, the poor man's blow,
The woman's laugh, the orphan's tear,
They come in swift rotation.

The tide came high, the tide came low,
The young go fast, the days go slow,
For me I care not how it comes,
So long as I can dream my dreams.

The good man thinks that he is good,
The bad man knows that he is bad,
Sleek, well-fed virtue like his own,
And thinks that sin is sad, so sad;
One lapse with a goodly hate
To call the other brother,
But peradventure it may be
A startling, yet divine decree,
When truths made manifest, shall be
Change places with the other.

The tide came high, the tide came low,
The young go fast, the days go slow,
For me I care not how it comes,
So long as I can dream my dreams.

Ah, friend, you say that life is short,
To vie with man to reach the host,
I care not if the world stands still,
Nor if the sun dawns in the West?
But midst the reeds upon the shore
I hear the babbling river saying
This dirge of fate, "Too late," too late!
O idle life, O empty heart,
Unused to hear, unskilled in praying.

WIT AND OTHERWISE.

—The new Scotch gabble.—Gladstone.

—The greater the sole the greater the understanding.

—"I die content," said the fly to the baker's dough. "Somebody will take me for a currant."

—A young lady is not like a tree. You cannot estimate her age by counting her rings.

—When a cat glows on entertainment from the top of a wall, it isn't the cat we object to; it's the wail.

—A dandy is an individual whose usefulness in this world depends entirely upon the fit of his clothes.

—It is said that eating onions will prevent the lips from chapping. It will certainly keep the chaps from the young ladies' lips.

—A man never appreciates the keen enjoyment of fishing on the part of the fish, until he gets his hook well into the nail of his thumb.

—"Are you a Home Ruler?" was asked of one of the candidates for K——, in the West of Scotland. A voice from the back seats answered, "No; but his wife is."

—"My club," said Mr. Black, when he was invited to join one; "my club is at home." "Yes," responded one of the boys, "and the old lady generally has it ready for you when you get there."

—"Cæsar," said a good-natured gentleman to his colored man, "I did not know till to-day that you had been whipped last week." "Didn't you, Massa?" replied Cæsar. "I know'd it at the time."

—Everything in Nature indulges in amusement. The lightning plays, the wind whistles, the thunder rolls, the snow flies, the waves leap, and the fields smile. Even the buds shoot and the rivers run.

—"What a strange thing it is that with such a name you should be such a wicked fellow," said Mr. Steel to Mr. Good. "Not at all" was the reply, "seeing that you, notwithstanding your name, are so very soft."

—Jane, under nine, to her governess: "Miss Blunt, when ma asks you to have some more wine to-day at dinner, do please, say 'Yes.'" Governess: "Why? What do you wish me to take more wine for?" Jane: "Oh, I only want to see ma's face."

—Recruiting Sergeant (to Sandy, who is possessed of immense feet)—Man, Sandy, you should jine the army, ye wad make a first-rate sodger. Sandy—Aye, hoo div ye mak' that oot? Recruiting Sergeant—Because, if ye were fightin' and were shot, ye widna fall.

—"In the instance 'John strikes William,'" remarked an Aberdeen schoolmaster, "which is the subject and what is the object?" After a pause, M'Meekell, junior, exclaimed, "the subject is strikes, and the object of John is to get more wages from William."

—Jack and the Doctor.—Dundee Doctor (looking learned, and speaking slowly): "Well, Jack, which tooth do you want extracted? Is it a molar or an incisor?" Jack (short and sharp): "It's in the upper tier, on the larboard side. Bear a hand, you swab, for it's nipping my jaw like a big lobster."

—A Yankee physician was lecturing lately on the ignorance of people of their own complaints, and said that a young lady once asked him what his next lecture would be upon, and being told "the circulation of the blood," replied that she would certainly attend, for she had been troubled with the complaint for a long time.

—The Cardinal Virtues.—Old Parson (who had once been Curate in the parish): "How do you manage to get on in these hard times, Mr. Johnson?" Farmer: "Well, sir, about as bad as can be. Last year we lived on faith; this year we're a' livin' on hope; and next year I'm afraid we shall have to depend on charity."

—"Did you make the train?" "No, it was made in the car-shops." "I mean did you catch the train?" "Of course not. It's not infectious." "Well, my Solon, did you arrive at the depot in time?" "No, I arrived in an omnibus." "Yes? and did you then board the cars?" "Alas! I do not keep a boarding house."

—Mr. H., the Professor of Chemistry in the University of Dublin, who was more remarkable for the clearness of his intellect than the purity of his eloquence, averted in one of his lectures to the celebrated Dr. Boyle, of whose talent he spoke with the highest veneration. He then concluded his eulogy: "He was a great man, a very great man; he was the father of chemistry, gentlemen, and brother of the Earl of Cork."

—A summer or two back a lady was spending a month at a sea-side village in lodgings. Her landlady had two children—a boy and a girl. One morning the brother and sister had been playing on the shore together. By-and-bye the little girl came running home and alarmed her mother. The lady lodger overheard her words—"Mither, mither," she said "Johnny's fa'en into the sea; but ye needna be feared—We'll find him when the tide's oot."

—"My dear," said an anxious father to his bashful daughter of [illegible] [illegible] that you shall be married, but I do not intend you to [illegible] any wild, [illegible] boy of the present day. You must marry a man of sense, [illegible] with whom [illegible] with personal [illegible]. What do you think of a fine [illegible] of fifty?" LADIES' COLUMN.

Fashion Notes.

—The yellowish pinks are called [illegible].

—Widow's caps are little worn under bonnets.

—Valenciennes lace is coming into favor again.

—Cinder is the name of a new shade of steely green.

—Foulards of Spanish net are to be worn this summer.

—Unfinished undershirts imperatively require overskirts.

—The Russian blouse waist will probably be worn this summer.

—Sensible boots and slippers are better than those with high heels.

—Black cashmeres sell almost as well as they did before the rage for color began.

—Some of the new white dresses are trimmed to the waist with Hamburg embroidery.

—Flounces on the underskirt are preferred to any other method of trimming the dress skirt.

—Collared lace, which has hitherto been almost monopolized by the children, is worn by ladies this year.

—Slippers with a great many straps are not so fashionable this summer as those that have one bow.

—The hooded costumes introduced last year are again worn this summer, and called pilgrimage suits.

—"Five dozen buttons at seven dollars a dozen," was one of the items in a dressmaker's bill the other day.

—Coffee with milk, coffee with cream and black coffee are some of the delicate distinctions made between the new colors.

—Dresses of shirred Indian muslin, with trains of white satin, are considered among the most handsome of those made for evening.

—Artificial flowers made entirely of rubber are now imported. They are made by the house that invented the rubber stems for umbrellas.

—Summer zephyr is the name of a new, creamy, cotton stuff, slightly crimped, and costing about one-tenth as much as muslin, which it resembles.

—Single-width fringe is cheaper than double, for it is two-thirds as wide and costs one-half as much. The proper trimming for it is Languedoc lace.

—Shawl cases are preferred to shawl straps for summer travel. They preserve their contents from dust and from the curiosity of one's fellow travellers.

—Small plaited gimps are set inside square-necked woollen dresses, the gimps being of the same material as the gown, and the folds are ironed very flat and are very fine.

—The fashionable gypsy, which girls like for spring wear, should have no more trimming than two ostrich tips and a bit of brocade knotted at the back and passed around the crown.

—Simple dresses of very light wool stuffs are made up for country wear. The materials come in several plain colors, and are made up with belted basques or plaited waists, and have no overskirt except an apron.

—Two-inch bands of feathers are now ornaments for the hair. They are worn with one edge higher than the other, an arrangement which is effected by parting the hair, and laying one edge of the band in the dividing line.

—Worth is making up "Spanish" costumes in grenadines, lined with black silk. They have short skirts, with elaborate plaitings and puffings and deep jet fringes on the short aprons of the overskirt. Sometimes the belts are of silk matching the lining, and tongues of bright-colored silk drop over the flounces.

A Proud Woman's Agony.

SHE DROWNS HER TWO CHILDREN AND ATTEMPTS TO PERISH WITH THEM.

ELMIRA, N.Y., May 4.—At Penn Yan this morning, Mrs. George Woodruff, during the temporary absence of her husband from home, about six o'clock, took her two sleeping children from bed, one aged six, the other aged one, and going to the cistern, drowned both. The husband on returning found all three in the cistern. The mother was standing with a dead infant in her arms. The other child was in the water, which was about the woman's waist. Efforts to resuscitate the children were useless. Before finding them Woodruff discovered a note addressed to him lying on the table as follows: "Dear George,—You will find the children in the cistern and, before you see me, I shall be in eternity. I cannot live another day in such agony." She had previously informed her husband she had several times made up her mind to kill the children and herself, but could not bring herself to it. An Advertiser special states the probable cause of Mrs. Woodruff's insanity was inability of the family to pay their debts. The unfortunate woman is highly regarded, and their impecuniosity and her proud spirit probably so preyed on her mind as to render her insane. When the wife was discovered, she made desperate efforts to take her own life. The coroner's jury rendered the somewhat remarkable verdict that the mother was guilty of wilful murder in drowning the children. She is insane now, and there is little doubt she was so when the deed was committed.

Home Attractions.

When love and affection are banished from home, life loses its greatest charm. Some homes are full of love and sunshine for strangers, and all ugliness and gloom for the ones for whom they live. To constitute a truly happy home, there should be pretty little personal adornments on the part of the wife, who thereby shows a desire to please her husband and add to the general attractions of home. A pleasant word on her part, when the overworked man comes home, often eases any raw edge of some trouble on his mind, draws out a corresponding desire to be both agreeable and respectful, which characteristics are always accompanied by affection; while roughness and impatience are soon followed by insolence, and when sweet temper gives way to anger and discord, the home circle is no longer attractive. A disrespectful manner on the side of the husband or wife leads to disastrous consequences.

GEMS OF THOUGHT.

—Nothing can be good which is not right.

—Self distrust is the cause of most of our failures.

—Ill-founded enmities are ever the most obstinate and bitter.

—An ugly and good woman is an angel who deserves beatification.

—Never anything can be amiss, when simpleness and duty tender it.

—He will never suffer from solitude who has never quarreled with himself.

—Promises made in times of affliction require a better memory than people commonly possess.

—The men who jump at conclusions seldom reach any that are worth having. These must be got by climbing.

—If you should tell all you know the recital might not require any great length of time, but if you should attempt to tell all you don't know one lifetime would not suffice.

—Premeditated evil. The man who feels remorse for evil he has done is to be pitied; but there is one being still more unfortunate—he who feels his guilt beforehand, and yet commits it.

—It is a glorious occupation, vivifying and self-sustaining in its nature, to struggle with ignorance, and discover to the inquiring minds of the masses the clear cerulean blue of heavenly truth.

—Rest is never so sweet as after a long struggle; strength is never so strong as through trial; joy is a blessed thing after sorrow; and the fair dawning of sunny days could never come if we had no night.

How the Captain's Patent Worked.

Having piped all hands to splice the main brace, the cap'n had the first mate of the farm tow out the horse and waggon, and, mounting the quarter deck of the craft, he took possession of the tiller ropes, (as he styled the reins,) and said:

"Now, boys, my invention is very simple—I might make a million dollars out of it, maybe, but I ain't going to patent it; you can use it if you want to. I've simply fastened a twenty fathom line on to the mizzen axel of the craft, and put on a small grapnel. I shall bring this here horse along the road under double-reefed topsails, and then one of you come across him—open an umbrella at him, or something; then, when he goes tearing along about twenty-five knots an hour, and won't answer to his helm, I'll just drop the anchor and ride out the gale. Git up!"

The horse came jogging gently down the road, when, according to the programme, the first mate pushed out and hit him a belt over the nose with a blanket. The terrified animal stood on his hind legs for a moment and then struck a course northwest by north with great celerity. The interested spectators beheld the fearless captain sitting unmoved, though the buggy bent and careened before the breeze, then with a triumphant smile they saw him heave out the anchor with a merry "Yo, heave, ho!" The grapnel dragged for a few moments in the treacherous sands of the road, then caught in a rock. Captain Cornwell rose into the air like a bird on the wing, and sailed majestically forward, alighting on his ear. The horse stood on his head for a second, and then resumed his onward course at the rate of at least seventy miles an hour, and, amid a frightful crashing, ripping, tearing, and smashing, all the wagon vanished into thin air, except a piece of the mizzen axel, to which the anchor had been fastened.

Captain Cornwell can't precisely understand why, when the tackle held, he wasn't able to ride out the gale, but is not discouraged and will repeat the experiment as soon as he has had a new buggy upon lines of his own designing. Life insurance canvassers are bearing down upon him from all quarters, and the liveliest interest is manifested in the neighborhood. We wish the gallant captain all success.

A Salted Snake Story.

THE FIRST OF THE SEASON UNCOILED BEFORE THE DAISIES SPRING.

On Tuesday last a German butcher by the name of Hans Wager passed through our town, en route for Little Rock, where, he stated, he had many friends. After travelling as far as the first crossing of Davis' creek he became fatigued, and, as there was no house in sight concluded to rest himself upon some flat rocks, which formed quite an inviting resting place by the roadside. Exhausted in mind as well as in body, he soon fell asleep, and all was a blank to him until he aroused with a start and the realization that he was in the clutches of some one or some thing. Looking down, such a sight met his eyes as would have made the stoutest heart bound with agitation. Clasping both right and left legs were two rattlesnakes of the diamond species, coiled from the feet up and looking him greedily in the face from both sides. It was a moment to try the nerve of the bravest hero known to history, and we need hardly say Mr. Wager trembled from head to foot, but knowing that his salvation was inaction rather than action, he dropped back as if shot and lay as one dead; how long he remained in this predicament is hard to tell, as under such circumstances minutes lengthen into hours and hours into days, but some time after dark both snakes, becoming wearied, no doubt, slowly uncoiled themselves, and, after crawling under his neck and round his head several times, moved quietly away. It is needless to say that our Teutonic friend made tracks for the nearest house, and fell fainting while trying to climb the fence to enter. After some little trouble he was revived, but was found that during his lying still, blood had oozed from his eyes and mouth; his hair, which he said before was raven black, had almost an iron-grey cast.

Badly Caught.

At eleven o'clock the other night a Detroit policeman came upon a man pounding vigorously on the door of a dwelling house, and he asked what he wanted there. The pounder was pretty well set up. He descended the steps, went close up to the officer and softly whispered in his ear:

"It's my—my own shanty, and I want to get in."

"But why don't you call out?" asked the bluecoat.

"Because I don't want to give myself away. I want to get into the house before the family [illegible]. I want my wife to think it's somebody else."

"Well, go ahead, but don't arouse the neighbors."

The officer sauntered on, but in about ten minutes he encountered the same citizen on the other side of the block. The man was [illegible] with cold water, and had lost his hat.

"Well! didn't you get in?"

"Not quite."

A Modern Jacob.

I was recently told by a young French gentleman, the son of the Prefect of La Rochelle, one of the strangest romances of real life that ever came to my knowledge. Some four years ago a peasant boy who lived on a farm near the town of Clermont-Ferrand saw and fell in love with a beautiful daughter of a gentleman of good fortune and position, he being at that time seventeen years of age and the young lady just sixteen. This new "Claude Melnotte" was so madly in love that he went straight to the house of the young girl's parents and demanded her hand in marriage. The father treated the preposterous proposition with good natured scorn. "Come back when you have an income of $40,000 ($200,000 francs)," was his answer, "and then we will see about it." The infatuated youth took him at his word. Now one of the peculiarities of the town of Clermont-Ferrand is a scarcity of water. There is no river near it, so it relies for its water supply on springs and wells. Under these circumstances a spring is a valuable piece of property and commands a relatively high price. So the young peasant lover set off for an adjacent mountain, there to search for hidden springs. My informant said that he had honey-combed the whole side of the mountain with his works, constructing at one point a tunnel over two miles in length. All this was executed with his own hands. He works from dawn to dark, lives upon potatoes of his own planting, and never spends as much as a sou upon a mug of beer. Every Sunday he goes to mass in town, after which he proceeds to the house of his lady-love to ask her if she is married or likely to be. On receiving a response in the negative he plods contentedly homeward, and starts out afresh to his toil on the morrow. This life has continued now for full four years. Up to the present time he has discovered three important springs, each of which he sold for $5,000, but though now possessed of what for a man in his condition of life is wealth, he abates none of the hardships of his existence. He had one fixed idea, namely, to become the possessor of a fortune sufficient to enable him to claim the hand of the object of his blind passion. Yet no one who knows the parties even imagines that the young lady will ever consent to marry him. She is now twenty years of age, and is pretty, refined, and accomplished, while he is a coarse unlettered peasant, without physical comeliness, as he is short and thickset, with a broad stolid countenance. What will be the end of his dream I wonder? Will he go mad or break his heart the day that he finds that his beloved either married or betrothed? Or will he die some day of privation and overwork, with a vision of success before his eyes?

Hanlan at Work in Washington.

Hanlan arrived at Washington on Friday afternoon to prepare for his great race with Courtney, on May 19th, between two and five o'clock. Courtney has not yet left Union Springs, where he is hard at work, nor will he, probably, before the 10th instant. Hanlan has already begun his work on the water. He had a comfortable trip in coming here, and looks in splendid condition. He was on the water twice on Saturday, once about ten o'clock, and again about four in the evening. He rowed down the river to Alexandria about four miles, covering about eight miles in all, and in the evening he went over about the same distance. He was rowing in excellent form, with that long, easy stroke of his with its tremendous reach which is so deceptive to anyone watching him from the shore, and at times he seemed to be going very fast. It was impossible to get any idea of Hanlan's time, however, from his swing on Saturday, for the recent rains have brought a small freshet which has made the current much stronger than usual; and besides this he was not rowing any particular course, but pulling all over the river, apparently studying the set of the current. Down the river he ran into a shad net, and came near breaking his shell in two against the poles; but he managed to get off again without damaging the net. He rowed about fifteen miles on Saturday in all, rather more than usual allowance, to stretch his muscles after his three or four day's rest. He is in capital spirits, and talked very freely and pleasantly. He is very anxious to meet Courtney again, and seems confident he will beat him. As to the mechanical appliances that Courtney has just put in his boat, and which he claims will increase his speed greatly, Hanlan declares that he has no idea what it is, and don't care for it anyhow. He says he has come here to beat his man squarely and he intends to do it. He feels confident, too, that he will have perfectly fair treatment, and that Courtney will not be allowed to take any undue advantage of him. In speaking of the proposal to allow Riley, of Saratoga, to take part in the race with himself and Courtney, he very frankly said he had objected to it for two reasons; first, that inasmuch as the match was originally made between himself and Courtney the public would prefer to have them row alone. His other reason, and probably the true one, is that Courtney and Riley being friends it will be easier to beat one than both. In plain English, he is afraid of jockeying, by which one of them will get in his way, giving him his wash, or something of the sort, and by sacrificing himself enable his friend to win. It is just possible, too, that he is afraid of Riley, who has improved marvellously within the past year or two, and whom Hanlan admits to be a very fast oarsman. As matters now stand we will not see unless either Hanlan or Courtney fails, when he will row the remaining man, to have a race, and a very close race it would be, too. The course is a good one except for a sharp bend near the start, and the Citizens' Committee promise to do all necessary policing; and as the Hop Bitters Company seem determined to have their money go to somebody on this occasion, it seems likely that there will be a good race on the 19th.—Correspondent to the Globe.

Front Door Yards.

In front yards one of the essentials is a well-kept lawn. Nothing is handsomer than smooth green grass. Without it all the grounds will always have a bare, unfinished appearance, and with it they will always be attractive. Flowers are plentiful and should be cultivated in every yard, but do not dig up the whole ground—have plenty of green grass, and keep it closely cut. It is surprising how attractive a well-kept door-yard is. It makes home look pleasant and adds a charm to life. Why do not our farmers give more attention to their home surroundings? A little time, a few hours occasionally spent in beautifying the grounds [illegible] [illegible]

Lord Brackenbury.

BY AMELIA B. EDWARDS,

Author of "Barbara's History," "Debenham's Vow," etc.

By-and-by, when his father died, and his elder brother was living with one foot on land and one on sea, Lancelot took a fancy to make a den for himself at Old Court, where the only weather-tight corner was occupied by a game-keeper. Here he appropriated two little rooms; put an easel in one, and a camp-bed in the other, and engaged the gamekeeper's wife to wait upon him. It was a rough life; but as he only ran down now and then for a month's shooting or sketching, he enjoyed the roughness of it, and desired nothing better. Later on, however, when Lord Brackenbury disappeared, and the great house was shut up, and the title and estates were in abeyance, he thought to turn the den into a comfortable pied-à-terre. So he roofed in two or three more rooms, ran up some stabling, removed the gamekeeper to a cottage near by, and made his home among the ruins. He had chambers also in London; but being hard at work just now upon a picture for the next Salon, he had settled down for some months of country life.

It was his wont to paint till about half past two or three in the afternoon, and then to ride or walk till dusk; but on this particular day, having gone doggedly on till the end of the daylight, he contented himself with a quarter deck stroll on the terrace. Here he paced slowly to and fro. He was thinking; and his thoughts, apparently, were not pleasant. There was gloom in the set look of his mouth, and in the way his hat was pulled down upon his brow. There was discontent in his very walk.

Coming presently to the end of his stroll, he pitched it impatiently over the balustrade, and paused to look at the darkening sky. It was all aglow a moment since—a dappled wedge of plumy cirro-stratus, drifting athwart the sky like a vast wing, each purple feather tipped with crimson; but now the last faint flush was gone, and the purples had faded to slaty grey. Below, all was mist and gathering darkness. In the valley a white fog was creeping along the flats, and the distant landscape had already sunk away to a sea of shadow.

Suddenly the silence was broken by a loud barking, as of dogs near by and others farther away; and presently two men, followed by a pointer and a retriever, came quickly up from below, making straight for the house. As they crossed the waste of garden, and mounted the last flight of steps, they proved to be a gentleman and a gamekeeper, each with his gun.

"There's Mr. Brackenbury, sir," said the man, jerking his thumb upward in the direction of the terrace.

The gentleman, who was about to turn toward the stables, stopped and stared around.

"Now, then, Cochrane," sang out the master of the house, "where are you going?"

Cochrane—otherwise Horace Cochrane, Esquire, of the Inner Temple, barrister, and Under-Secretary of the War and Water Department, Downing Street—gave his gun to the keeper, and joined his friend.

"So you're here, are you?" said he. "I waited for you at the Crow's Nest for the best part of an hour. Been at work all day?"

"Yes—after a fashion. But I told you not to wait. If I had come at all, I should have been there as soon as yourself."

"Oh, it didn't matter. I rather like it. There was a queer old fellow there—Isaac something-or-another—a sort of rat-catcher, or sand-carrier. He told me he was one of your tenants. I treated him to beer, and drew him out. He was great fun."

"I know him," said the other. "Isaac Plant—an awful old blackguard."

"So I should imagine."

"And one of the biggest poachers out."

"He looks it. I've promised to pay him a visit. He has a bull dog pup for sale. Lives somewhere on the moor, doesn't he?"

"Not on this moor—on Burfield Moor, right away on the other side, beyond the colliery. But he is not a nice [illegible] and he'll cheat you if he can. What sort of a day have you had?"

"Not brilliant. Three brace of pheasants, two of partridges, and a couple of rabbits. I don't care much for that young retriever of yours—the old dog is worth a dozen of him."

"You are right—but wouldn't you rather go in?"

Mr. Cochrane, however, preferred a cigar on the terrace; so they continued to walk up and down in the dusk.

"About that old fellow—that Isaac Plant," said Mr. Cochrane, presently. "Is he one of the queer race you were telling me about the other day—Hyperboreans, Anthropophagi, or something?"

"You mean the 'dark folk,' as we call them. Yes, he's one of them; and a mighty bad specimen of a mighty bad lot. But they're neither Hyperboreans nor Anthropophagi, nor do their heads so far as I know, grow beneath their shoulders."

"What are they, then?"

"Well they're supposed to be of Saracen origin, or what is called Saracen, for want of a better term. There's a legend about them—that they were captives brought over at the time of the Crusades, and that they have lived here ever since."

"And who brought them—one of your ancestors?"

"Oh no—a Langtrey of the time of Cœur de Lion. The Langtreys are ever so much older than the Brackenburys. All these moors were originally their property. They date from the creation of the world; whereas we emerged from nothingness about the time of Henry the Seventh."

"And Langtrey Grange—does that also date from the creation?"

"Wait till you've seen it."

"My dear fellow, I do nothing but wait. I have been here a fortnight, and I believe I shall go away after all without seeing it."

"I will take you over there to-morrow—foi d'honneur! It is the most wonderful old place," said Mr. Cochrane.

"Ay, abroad—but not in the way of English mediæval timber houses. There is nothing in Chester or Tewkesbury to compare with Langtrey Grange. It's the finest thing of its kind in England."

"You say so much about it that I begin to think I had better not see it at all," said the guest. "I hate to be disappointed."

"You won't be disappointed this time."

"That's what people always say. I never yet saw a famous beauty that I could admire—simply because she had been overpraised beforehand."

"Ah, but you're fastidious about beauty."

"There you are wrong. I can admire agreeable mediocrity when left to put my own valuation upon it; but, [illegible] of another, when raptures are [illegible], I never can bring myself to follow suit. You call Miss Langtrey a beauty, don't you?"

"My father admired her immensely, and he was as hard to please as yourself," replied Lancelot Brackenbury, coldly.

"Meaning that you are not of the same opinion?"

"I don't say that."

Napanee Beaver.

SATURDAY, MAY 15, 1880.

We only echo the common feeling of the whole country when we express our deep regret in announcing the death of Hon. George Brown, which took place at his residence, Toronto, on Sunday morning last, at two o'clock. On the 25th of March, six weeks and four days from the time of his death, the Hon. senator received his death wound at the hands of a drunken, dissipated vagabond. At the time there was no fear felt nor expressed of its ultimately proving fatal. The wound was a mere flesh one, but the shock to the assassin's victim's system was so great that unfavorable symptoms speedily supervened. Inflammation set in, the wounded thigh swelled and abscesses were formed in the neighborhood of the wound. About three weeks ago alarming symptoms showed themselves, the patient becoming delirious with brief lucid intervals, and the failing strength was supported by artificially administered nourishment. On Friday, May 7th, Mr. Brown began to sink rapidly. All day Saturday life seemed only conditional on death's forbearance. He continued to sink, and on Sunday morning the foremost man of Canada passed from the scene of his earthly triumphs to the happiness of a higher life. A few days before his death, in one of the few conscious intervals vouchsafed to him, he told his attendants that he felt he was about to die; that he should like to live to finish his work, but he bowed in submission to the will of Heaven, and rested confidently on the hope inspired by the Redeemer's sacrifice. Death, at any time, is terrible, and by the least repugnant forms is the supreme bitterness of human experience, but for a great man like George Brown, by no means an old man, and comparatively untouched by physical or intellectual decrepitude, when he was casting about to put worthily the cope stone on the grand structure of his busy and laborious political life, at an hour when his country, when his party needed most the benefit of his counsel and the infusion of his energy, to be stricken down by the hand of a nameless libertine and ne'er-do-well, is indeed bitter. How greatly the cowardly, cruel act is reprobated, everybody knows. Every voice, whether of friend or whilom political foe, is raised in condemnation or softens with sympathy, in the hour of death of a great man who has been second to none other in his influence on the destiny and well being of his adopted country. His death has made, for a long time, an inseparable gap in the ranks of the Reform party, of which he has been the head and front for the last thirty years; and his mortal secession from the ranks of the party in Ontario with the leading spirit in Quebec, in the person of Hon. Mr. Holton, makes the loss to the Reform party even greater and more embarrassing. It is a star of hope on the murky horizon of politics, in whose underlying arena there is given room to so much rancor and bitterness, that for the moment the hand of death sweeps all these away, and political friends stand side by side around the grave of the great departed, and mingle their tributary tears. All over the country Mr. Brown's death has called forth the most affecting tokens of respect. The press and pulpit unite in their liberal meed of tribute; in every town and city the flags float half mast, and the whole country mingles with its mourning, indignant condemnation of the hand that laid low the subject of this sketch. Mr. Brown was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, on the 29th of November, 1818, and at the time of his death was sixty-one years and five months old. He came to America in 1838, and stimulated by the bitter anti-British tone aroused in American journalism by the rebellion of '37-'38, he, in conjunction with his father, started the British Chronicle. The journal was, in 1843, removed to Toronto, and its name changed to the Banner. This being an organ of the Free Church of Scotland, it did not satisfy Mr. Brown's political longings, and in 1844, March 5th, appeared the Globe as a weekly, and from this date his active political life began. The ink was scarcely dry on the first number of the Globe before Mr. Brown was importuned to contest a seat in parliament, but he steadily refused. The Globe grew, and 1846 it was issued twice a week, and three years afterwards it became a tri-weekly and in the month of October, 1853, the Daily Globe became an accomplished fact. In 1851 Mr. Brown first entered parliament as the representative of Kent. Mr. Brown made a hobby of representation by population as a cure for the evils inflicted on Upper Canada, by the solid vote of the Lower Canada representatives, assisted by a coterie of willing Upper Canadians. For this principle he wrought in both political and journalistic capacities with amazing energy. In 1857 he was returned to parliament for both Toronto and North Oxford. In 1858 the Brown-Dorion government was formed, succeeding the Macdonald-Cartier administration, but it enjoyed an existence of only two days. Mr. Brown's greatest work was his share in the work of securing the confederation of the provinces. Struggling, as he had done all his life, for the good of his country, he was willing to drop personal feelings and be united. There was an almost political dead-lock, and Mr. Brown worked in concert with Hon. Messrs. Macdonald and Galt, the then leaders of the conservative party to bring about confederation, which was accomplished in 1867. He entered the coalition ministry as President of the Council. In 1873 he was made a Dominion senator, and since that time he has taken a less active part in politics, though his influence has had a prominent effect. Mr. Brown was, without doubt, a great man. For over thirty years he has been a central and striking figure in Canadian politics. He worked for the interests of his country, he was mercilessly bitter against his opponents, and not always compliant with his own party, the strength of his convictions and the honesty of his belief that he was right, made him mindless of minor considerations, and impelled him to the most vigorous and energetic exertions. He was an orator when warmed to his work, and swayed his hearers by subtle transmissions of the force of his own convictions. A record of Mr. Brown's life for the past thirty years would be the political history of Canada for that time. The day is far distant when we shall look upon his like again.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OUR NORTHWEST LETTER.

We make a few extracts from a private letter, from a gentleman now situated at Shoal Lake, northwest territory:

"Although there is a great howl about speculators owning so much land in the region, and keeping it from the actual settlers, (for whom by-the-by there are millions of acres of good land left,) it is not an unmixed evil, since these same speculators have expended capital, have advertised largely, and have sent out an agent with instructions to build a mill and other buildings to form the nucleus of a town, thus affording a great advantage by way of town privileges to town settlers. Of these than an far twenty miles around a great number of thriving farmers, principally settled the past year, and all sides of the lakes and as far up as the riding mountains. It will be seen the presence of a village will be a great convenience. The land company with which I am treating are to erect a grist mill by harvest, and also establish a brick yard as building timber is scarce. There are sawmills in course of erection about twenty miles from us, but in a great many parts and where the land is splendid, wood is scarce. Coal will in time no doubt supply the lack of fuel, but a felt want is the want of the C P R R. out from Winnipeg.

The roads are so bad, and all stuff having to be freighted, it costs so much that it would be a great boon if the government would push on the railway even 100 miles west of Winnipeg. The blessing and benefit to all settlers, for each 100 miles of the Canada Pacific road, is incalculable. As I see now, I am inclined to acknowledge the wisdom of abandoning the most northerly route, and pushing through the road with a view of colonizing and filling up the country with settlers as fast as possible. In my humble opinion, this is of far more importance than hastening to get communication with British Columbia by a more direct and shortened route. So you see, dear Beaver, that I go with you this once in favor of the government's and Mail's policy rather than with the Globe's views, although the latter journal is sound in a great many things, it advances in regard to this country and its settlement. On my way up here it was simply marvelous the number of Ontario people I met on the trail. Everybody seemed to be from Ontario. I was two days at Selkirk. The Red River is navigable for ships close to that town, and it is said that the Hudson's Bay route to Liverpool is many days shorter than the New York route, and it is not at all unlikely that in a few years Ontario will get the go-by, and grain be shipped direct to Liverpool. In the meantime, seeing that immigrants are pouring in by thousands, the farmers may for years look for local demand. Hereabouts, since January, wheat sold for about $1, and I am assured by good Ontario farmers that it pays better to raise wheat here at 80c. per bushel than to get $1 per bushel in Ontario. Oats are from $1 to $1.50, and scarce. Hay, although it may be had for the cutting, sells to the Mounted Police at from $5 to $15 per ton. I paid 80c. for potatoes and drew them eighteen miles. I paid $2.75 for flour at the portage, but 150 miles west it is scarce at $5 50 to $6 per 100 lbs.; bacon 20c.

All parties agree that the past winter has been the severest and longest for the past ten years. We had good sleighing on the way up, and made the trip in eleven days, that others will require weeks to travel when the frost is out of the ground. Parties coming to this country do not need to be made of soft stuff or easily discouraged. A stout heart and lots of courage are necessary qualities and a good supply of ready cash is also very convenient and even indispensable. One thing that is hard on us fresh arrivals from a more advanced civilization is the fact that we only get a mail once in three weeks. An individual, to form any idea of the vastness and greatness of this country must see it for himself. I am sure that in a very few years the country for hundreds of miles inland will be settled—its future greatness is undoubted. I will let you hear from me hereafter.

Yours, &c., JOCK.

TOWN COUNCIL.

COUNCIL CHAMBER,
Napanee, May 11, 1880.

Council met in adjourned session.

Present—His worship, in the chair, and Messrs. Wales, Aylesworth, Cliff, Carnmilon, Wilson, Preston, Joy and Gibbard.

PETITIONS

From Napanee Brush Company and others, asking that the walk be renewed on John street, from Dundas to Water street. Deferred till first meeting in June.

From A. T. Harshaw and others, asking to have a sidewalk not less than eight feet wide from Mrs. Davy's to Simcoe street, or farther if deemed possible, on Dundas street. Deferred till June.

MORRISON'S FENCE.

Mr Cliff said that the Street committee had examined the new fence erected by John Morrison, and find it encroaches on the street, about six feet, and that he refuses to remove it, and he thought that Mr. M. should be compelled to do so. The Street committee were allowed two weeks to put the above report in writing.

FIRECRACKERS.

Mr Gibbard referred to the danger arising from the promiscuous discharge of firecrackers throughout the town. He had found squibs in his stable yard, and he thought the bylaw against such dangerous amusements should be enforced.

DEBENTURE BYLAW.

A bylaw was introduced to raise the sum of $3 000 to retire debentures maturing next July, and passed its second reading, preparatory to being submitted to the people, authorizing the Mayor to borrow $3 000 on the security of debentures of the town. The bylaw also calls for the raising by way of taxation $420.25, to form a sinking fund for the retirement of the debentures on maturity. The bylaw, if passed, to come into effect June 22d, voting to take place in the several wards on the 14th June.

Terrible Accident.

MONTREAL, May 10.—A terrible accident happened here to-day. Alexed Legault, employed at Messrs. Pillow, Hersey & Co.'s nail factory, attempted to readjust a running belt on a pulley, when by some slip his right arm was seized by the wheel and in an instant he was lifted from his feet and hurled against the ceiling. The first announcement his fellow-operatives had of his imminent peril was a shriek, which resounded distinctly through the enormous building, being heard above the clatter and clanging of the iron-working machinery. The alarm was speedily communicated to the engineer, who lost no time in stopping the engines, but before this could be done Legault was whirled around several hundred times. When released from his position it was found he had lost the right arm. It had been wrenched from the shoulder leaving with it a mass of flesh from the side of the chest.

MILL POINT.

The [illegible]

Last week we gave for our columns, a lengthy account of the industries of Mill Point as controlled and conducted by Messrs. Rathbun & Son, although, as far as exhausting the subject was concerned, it was the merest sketch. In continuation of our journalistic survey, on Tuesday last our reporter repeated his pleasant and interesting visit. The chief object of interest unalluded to in our last issue was owned by the firm. The site of this magnificent agricultural enterprise is just north of the village, the entrance being opposite the head of Centre street. However, before referring upon the farm, it is worth while to note the private residence of H. B. Rathbun, Esq., the senior member of the firm, who now, it is understood, left the cares and anxieties of business to his sons, and rests in this comparatively secluded and beautiful spot, a sort of rustic Constantinople. The residence is a handsome building, situated in the midst of grounds of about six acres in extent. The grounds in front of the house are laid in lawn, the drive dividing them near the centre being flanked by privet hedges. Adjoining the residence on the east is a conservatory, to which the venerable owner is greatly attached. In the rear of the dwelling are the stables, cow sheds, etc. The remainder of the land is devoted to horticultural purposes. The whole place, when a few years shall remove the crudity of newness, and the trees plentifully planted about shall have grown, will be a most delightful spot.

To the east of the residence is the present entrance to the farm proper, which, however, will be changed to the opposite side of the house and room made for the entrance on more level ground by the removal its width or so westward of the Union church. The farm consists of 300 acres in a rectangular block. It is divided into two equal portions forty rods wide each, separated by what on most farms would be called a lane, which in this case can be described by no less dignified title than an avenue, inclosed by a neat board fence four and a-half feet high, along which are planted its whole length on either side at frequent intervals maple trees. It does not take for short of a thousand trees to flank the avenue on both sides. So well are the trees cared for after planting, that the loss is only about one out of three hundred. With the exception of two or three thinly wooded inclosures on the front of the farm, reserved as a sort of park or pleasure grounds, the whole farm consists of two fields, divided only by the central avenue. This latter is graded and built in a manner that would shame the majority of corporation roads. The bed, about seven feet wide, is formed of a substantial stratum of hardheads, and this again overlaid with finely broken macadam, the result of stones gathered from the fields, which are as smooth and free from stones as a housewife's swept "bed." About the centre of the farm is a ridge more or less rocky, but covered with excellent soil, differing in composition from the rich alluvial deposits of which the rest of the farm is chiefly composed. From this ridge, on its northern side, where it is more precipitous, the road is filled in to the depth of about ten feet, and the brow of the ridge excavated to make the roadway, as nearly as practicable, level. On this eminence, to the right of the road, looking northwards, are the farm buildings in course of construction. The contract for building the farm house for the residence of the foreman of the farm, Mr. D. B. Shoemaker—who by the way is no cobbler at his profession, as his name might imply—is in the hands of Messrs. Burgess & Bartlett, of Napanee. The house costs $2,000, and is so situated as to command from its "observatory," a view of the entire constituency of the foreman. The grounds surrounding it will be suitably ornamented with trees, drives, walks, etc. From the farm house to the front of the farm, a four foot plank walk will be built on each side of the avenue. The barn, under contract to Ryan & Stroud, is 64 x 36 feet, with 21 feet posts. The cellar is 9 feet high in the clear, and contains the cow and horse stables and granary. The system of cultivation is of the most thorough description. As before mentioned, the ground is cleared completely of stones and stumps. Some idea of the labor and energy carried into the work may be gained from the fact that acres on acres of soil which last year were covered with a thick growth of weed, are now heavily gathering greenness from the springing grain, and so far is this perfection of tilth carried that the very trees mentioned above are cultivated and hoed as if they were corn, and between them and the inner side of the fence, the intervals between them are planted with potatoes, which serve the double purpose of a paying crop and keeping the neighborhood of the fence, by virtue of the necessary cultivation, clean from grass and foul weeds which might otherwise abound. There is no "quack" grass on this farm, though its presence on the neighboring ones shows that nothing but the most peremptory discouragement decides its absence. On the farm there are now fifty acres of winter wheat, which, though it has been considerably injured by the frost, will average, it is estimated, the not unprofitable yield of twenty bushels to the acre. The spring crop consists of 140 acres of barley, all put in by grain drills, and now just nicely showing above the ground in straight, narrow parallel threads of vivid and thrifty green. Thirty acres are devoted to oats, which cover ground that a year ago was, to judge of the continuation of the land on either side, a wilderness of thickety shrubs. About ten acres of rich Manitoban-looking bottom land is to be planted with corn, and about three acres with potatoes.

The farm is yet in comparatively a crude state, and if the sustained expenditure of money and intelligent effort personified in the foreman, Mr. Shoemaker, produce in the next few years the marvels of improvement that have taken place since he took charge of the farm in 1872, the place will be an agricultural paradise. The original cost of the farm was $13,000. It is now clearly worth $30 000, and is rapidly growing in value. It is partially underdrained, and is to be treated more liberally in that respect hereafter. As yet, no artificial fertilizers have been used, but next year phosphate will be largely employed. This farm is a model one, both as extent and in the excellence and thoroughness of the system of cultivation employed, and our Lennox farmers will do well to profit by so good an example, and will make money by taking a leaf out of the book of Mr. Shoemaker, foreman farmer of Messrs. Rathbun & Son.

Rathbun's Railway.

The surveys are completed for a branch railway to run from the Grand Trunk to Mill Point. The branch line will probably extend from a crossing station east of the boundary, and thence along the boundary to Mill Point. The next six months will probably see the line in operation. It will prove of immense advantage to the firm.

A Baby Hangs in its Crib.

John Bence, of Glendale, lost his little baby, a boy only twelve or thirteen months old, yesterday in a most singular manner. A little before noon Mrs. Bence had rocked the baby to sleep and had laid him away in his crib. The crib is of the ordinary pattern, but with the little rounds which connect the upper and lower side slats, some eight or ten inches apart. Just before dinner Mrs. Bence sent two of her older children upstairs to see if baby was all right, and the report was favorable. Baby was still sleeping sweetly. Twenty or twenty-five minutes later the mother went upstairs herself, to find her little baby a corpse. He was hanging by the side of the crib, his head fastened between the two side slats, in which position he had been strangled or suffocated. On awakening, he had attempted to crawl, had [illegible] out of the crib between the slats, and between two of the rounds already referred to. His body, once through, [illegible] suddenly jerked his little head [illegible] against the slats, holding his chin [illegible] so tightly compressed that the slightest sound from him was impossible. In this position he had died.

[illegible] Accident.

MR. ALEXANDER FALCONER KILLED.

The Kingston News says:—It was with feelings of unfeigned regret that we learned last evening of the occurrence of an accident which resulted in the death of Mr. Alexander Falconer, eldest son of the late Mr. James Falconer, of this city, which sad event took place yesterday morning. The news was telegraphed to [illegible] yesterday, which proved a severe shock to his relatives residing in Kingston, and which was learned with deep sorrow by the many friends with whom he associated during the years Kingston was his home. Particulars did not reach the city last night; but this morning on making enquiries through the Montreal Telegraph Company, we were furnished with the following despatch:

"DETROIT, MICH., May 8.

A special from Bay City, dated 7th, to the Detroit Post and Tribune says:—A terrible and fatal accident occurred at Pinconning this morning, by which Mr. Alexander Falconer, who was in the employ of J. H. Plummer, who represents the Bank of Commerce of Ontario in the Pinconning Lumber Company, lost his life. Mr. Falconer was secretary and bookkeeper for the company and one of the directors in the Pinconning Railway. He had been in the habit of riding on the long couplings of the cars which admit of their spreading to receive long timber, and in doing so this morning he lost his hold and fell between the cars, which passed over one of his legs close to the body. He died at nine o'clock and his body reached this city at noon. The body will start from here for Kingston, Ont., tomorrow morning at seven o'clock."

The deceased young gentleman was well known to many persons in Napanee, and his melancholy end causes the deepest regret. He was a brother of Mr. James Falconer at one time in the office of Messrs. Deroche & Wright.

A Miraculous Escape.

The Cobourg Sentinel Star says:—On Friday, April 23d, the three youngest children of Major Rogers, at Grafton, had a most wonderful escape. On going into the stable yard, where a pair of horses were being hitched to a waggon, they climbed up to the front seat in order to have a ride round to the door. By some means the horses started off suddenly before the man could catch the reins. The feelings of Mr. and Mrs. Rogers can only be imagined as they saw them dash past the house, down the hill and across the bridge at a fearful rate. The waggon, which is a heavy standard democrat, did not overturn at the sharp curve, and they got safely through the open gate. On nearing the turn on to the gravel road, a quarter of a mile distant, Percy, the eldest of the three, with a coolness and presence of mind really astonishing for a boy of seven years, took his little brother in his arms, climbed over the front seat and dropped him out behind, then went forward again and after doing the same thing for his five year old sister, he jumped out himself, though not till after the team had made the turn, gone into the ditch and out again at a furious gallop. Wonderful to relate, they all escaped with scarcely a scratch, and after rolling over and over in the dust they jumped up and ran back to meet their terrified but overjoyed parents. The horses continued on, and after leaving part of the waggon at a telegraph pole in the village, they ran with the fore wheels to the wharf, about three miles distant, where they were caught, and strange to say also quite uninjured.

In the evening there will be a display of physiogs and fireworks. Admission to the grounds, 25 and 15 cents. Dinner will be served at 12.30 p. m.

Fraternal Visit.

On Thursday evening the members of Bay of Quinte Lodge I. O. O. F., Picton, paid their brethren of Napanee a visit, and a most enjoyable time was spent in the exchange of fraternal courtesies. The Picton brethren, to the number of thirty-one, arrived about 7 o'clock per steamer Flight, they being accompanied by the 16th Battalion Band. The dock and all the surrounding square was filled with a crowd of spectators, and the members of Napanee and Argyle lodges were drawn up in open file to receive their visitors. Headed by the band, the procession moved up Robert street to Dundas street, and thence to Argyle Lodge Rooms, in the Hoffman block. Here nearly two hours were spent in friendly greetings and congratulations. With the visiting brethren were [illegible] pleased to notice [illegible] Striker, Esq., M. P. P., Dr. Noxon, mayor of the town, [illegible] Sheriff [illegible], Ald. Vanhorn, T. [illegible] Carson, Esq., Andrew David son, Esq., Mr. Aylesworth, and many of the most prominent men of Picton and the county of Prince Edward.

About 11 p. m. the party adjourned to the Campbell House, where a substantial repast had been prepared for the entertainment of the visitors. A. L. Morden, Esq., chairman of the joint committee, occupied the head of one table and Mr. D. Pearn, N. G. of Argyle lodge, the other. About 111 sat down, and one and all seemed to do ample justice to the collation which had been provided for the inner man by Messrs. Dorland & Mem[illegible]. In justice to these gentlemen it is but fair to state that they had scarcely a fair show as supper was ordered for one hundred, and it was but a few minutes before the guests came in that they were notified that the number would be largely increased. However they proved fully equal to the [illegible]. After supper the following toast [illegible] proposed by the chairman:

[illegible]

The education of the common mind,
And with a twig we drive it on behind.

[illegible] in a brief address referring to the manner in which they had been entertained, [illegible] the toast of the Napanee Brethren, which was responded to by [illegible], J. J. Perry, R. McDonald, W. Anderson and W. P. Williams, Esq., the latter being apparently in his happiest mood made a very humorous speech.

The proceedings were then brought to a close by singing "Auld Lang Syne." The visitors were soon afterwards escorted to the steamer, and were sent off amid rousing cheers and an impromptu display of fireworks. Everything passed off pleasantly and the Napanee lodges are to be congratulated on the unanimous manner in which their members turned out to welcome their visitors.

We must say a word of the band. They have one of the finest sets of instruments ever brought to Canada, consisting of sixteen pieces which were manufactured by C. J. Conn, of Elkhart, Indiana. All the instruments are of silver, beautifully chased and ornamented with gold. The members of the band were in the uniform of the battalion to which they belong, and with the torches in their hats they presented a very tasty appearance. They certainly discoursed very fine music, much to the delight of the hundreds of citizens who turned out to welcome the visitors.

TAMWORTH.

—Spring sowing nearly completed in this vicinity.

—The drive of logs in charge of M. Blondin passed last week.

—The firm of Way & Leech dissolved partnership some time since. Mr. Leech then in partnership with Mr. Vanest, purchased the "Sheffield Mills," formerly owned by Grange Bros., and latterly by the Messrs. Northwood, of Chatham, Ont., for the sum of $4,000. Mr. Lawrence Way continues the dry goods business in the old stand.

—A new provision and grocery store has been opened lately on the corner of Bridge street by Mr. B. W. Fraser, "to keep himself employed," he says.

—Preparations are in progress for the construction of a M. E. parsonage on the site of the one lately burned.

—Mr. James Shields has made a very handsome pastoral for Rev. M. O'Donohoe.

—We are going to display our loyalty on the 24th inst., by a demonstration, which we hope will "draw."

—Our postoffice, rumor says, is going to be changed, the present postmaster not being in accord, politically, with the powers that be. Mr. Aylesworth being active, energetic, smart and suave, his removal will be regretted by many.

—Mr. Fuller's new hardware shop looks neat; he will sell anything, "from a needle to an anchor."

—I would advise the proprietor of the Echo to get a crusher and extract the mineral from some of the lumps of "specimens" in the office.

—Mr. Wilson, aged 69, living in the ninth concession of Camden, in reply to an interrogation, said "the family were all well, except his mother, aged 99 years and 6 months, who was not in as good health as usual; that he had never known her to be ill since the death of her husband thirty years ago."

—Some of our young men visited Erinsville a few nights ago, and not having any desire for pugilistic encounters, the young bloods of the place exhibited a desire to have some one "tread on the tail of me coat" in true Hibernian style.

—Our tavern inspector thought three hotels would quench the thirst and entertain all coming this way. Now Mr. Robinson is dissatisfied.

—"Terry," of Centreville, seems to mumble and think "it is human to err." "Save these young men from falling." "Jack" says the Publicans are jealous because his business is [illegible] prosperous.

—The cells, tolls and [illegible] are occupying more time than usual, since the [illegible] [illegible] have become solid. "Standing at the gate" can now be endured.

—Quite a number of cases were disposed of [illegible] by Judge Price of Kingston. Mr. B. L. [illegible] prefers jury cases.

EVELYN.

BELL ROCK.

—The cheese factory has opened, and is doing a flourishing business under the guidance of Miss [illegible] of Centreville.

—The small boy [illegible] business is likely to lead to serious trouble in this place. Not long since a small boy by the name of Lowcaque was caught on the premises of Mr. Sayes, and that gentleman, suspecting the boy's errand, coolly pitched him into the river. The boy made big time in getting ashore, and also made big time towards home, and of a certainty, informed his parents of what had taken place. They were very indignant and demanded a settlement, which was refused, and then they sought recourse in law. The feeling of the entire community lies with the defendant, and it is hoped that instead of his being punished he may succeed in winning the suit.

—Mr. Walker, an old resident of this place, died on the 22d ult., and now his aged widow lies very low, but her many friends still have hopes of her recovery.

—It is with the deepest regret that we announce the illness of Mr. E. Asselstine, who left this town last fall for Saratoga. We understand that he lies in a very critical condition, but his brother writes that he thinks, with good care, he may recover.

—The boys of the place are preparing for a big time to-night (Monday, 10th). Miss Perrault has, this day, joined her hand in the holy bonds of matrimony with a handsome young gent of this place, and while your humble servant sits penning these lines, the distant tinkling of bells comes floating o'er the evening breeze, assisted along by the occasional crack of a gun. Success to the boys.

—A young lady met with a very serious and painful accident in this town on Monday last. It appears that while she was running a sewing machine, the band became loose, and in tightening it, used an instrument which should have been used for another purpose, and the consequence was, her hands were severely cut and mangled, but it is to be hoped, that, with good care, she may not be long suffering.

—The fishing season is in its full height, and immense quantities of finny tribe are being hauled from the river every day.

JUNO.

FLYING McKITTRICKISMS.

FOREST MILLS.

Farmers are near done seeding, potatoes are the only crop yet to be sown. The breadth sown exceeds that of last year.

Messrs. Breeze Bros. have built the finest sugar house in this part of the country.

I will describe some of the buildings I observed in my last flight.

First, accompanied by Mr. Thos. Trimble, I went over the Paisley House. I did not take detailed notice of it, but in walking through I noticed that it is a first-class house from cellar to roof, with fine, large, airy rooms, all finished in the best of style. I noticed that the family of Rev. Mr. Young occupy rooms here, pending the completion of repairs to the manse. I had a long and pleasant conversation with Mrs. Young, who was about to depart to visit friends in Michigan. I noticed two life like and excellent pictures of the late Mr. Chas. Paisley. Mrs. P. informs me that she intends renting the hotel, and to live privately, as her sons are going into other business the first of June. The sheds and stabling are also complete, and the whole establishment is one of the best hotel privileges in the country.

I made a visit to the lime kiln of Mr. Meagher, on Rablin's hill, but as your local columns will contain a full notice, I will refer the reader to that. Personally, I must say that the lime is of a very superior quality. I think the Ontario government should make a contract with Mr. Meagher to supply lime for the construction of the new parliament buildings.

I noticed at McLaughlin's corner a new patent [illegible] grinder at work, which does its work complete. A stone with a double bevel is used to correspond to the bevel of the [illegible]. Mr. Daniel McKim has purchased the right for Lennox & Addington.

I feel very proud over the present of a double bladed jack knife from Mr. H. W. Perry, of the Golden Gimlet, or Auger. I have no wonder now at the many persons I have seen about this shop, after I have seen the large and excellent stock kept, as well as [illegible] and oils. In the latter case the Golden [illegible] strikes oil every time. I might mention that the knife was [illegible] to me because I was the best looking [illegible] correspondent of THE BEAVER [illegible] to keep [illegible] competition.

"Will O' the Wisp," alias "Wandering Willie," alias "the bald headed woodcock." I have been a long time in search of this fowl, and now I have got him ready for use when I want him. When I went into the wig business I did not think I would be patronized by so many bald headed birds, but I think I can furnish them all, as Penny has a double supply of hair. Queen Dido will help me in the manufacture. He accuses me, in the April 14th number of the Reporter (No wonder that this paper has since died) that I abused the ex Rev. Wm. Henry Snider as regards the London Mutual. I did not abuse the Rev. gentleman alluded to. I only spoke the truth. I gave statement of his company as per last return I was in possession of, and if any person disputes my statement, let him come on. I will give the public, from time to time the correct percentage of any companies doing business. The farmers shall not be kept in the dark as long as I write for THE BEAVER. The latest information respecting the "London Mutual" shows that a decline is shown by the company of $492,791 in net amount at risk, but net losses had increased by $11,821; the net cash premiums on 12,309 policies amounted to $65,013, a little less than the previous year; general expenses $26,199, claims, $56,560. Its expenditure exceeds its income from all sources by $12,515, and its unsettled losses amount to $35,000. Now, "Willie," if you wish to show the public whether "we," as you term it, know anything about insurance in general come on and see us in the next issue.

Mrs. Annie Rush has removed from the hotel business to a private residence. She has made many friends while in the business, and has my best wishes.

The first drive of saw logs on the Salmon has made its appearance. The logs belong to Mr. Frank Wallbridge, and are superintended by Mr. John Blondin, of Shannonville.

ODESSA.

Was it the whisky stored in Odessa cellars during the reign of Dunkin, or was it riding in a wagon laden with the good Kingston ale, that caused the gentleman that owned the waggon, to fall out? He was moved and taken care of by Mr. Wm. Henry Smith. Mrs. S. acted the part of the Good Samaritan, poured nourishment into him and sent him on his way rejoicing.

I will, without fail, visit the Napanee paper mills on the 17th inst., at 2 o'clock; will go as far as Clarks Mills and call on Mr. Galbraith, and will take notes on my route. I should like to meet Mr. John R. Scott, managing director at the paper mill.

My next trip will be North and South Fredericksburgh and Adolphustown; will go also to Stone Mills, and would like to see Mr. John McKillop, late of Forest Mills. Will give date of my visit in my next.

While in Napanee I met Mr. Daniel Haight, of Adolphustown, who honored me with a year's subscription to THE BEAVER, paid in advance. Please send it to his address, Dorland P. O.

I also met Messrs. Mallory, Davis and Murdoch, who all invited me to call on my way route.

The best barley I have seen is on the farm of Mr. Parrott, county treasurer.

Whilst coming along the road through Morven, I noticed, with pleasure, many young ladies and gentlemen wending their way to the beautiful C. M. Church. A young gentleman named Fraser told me that Rev. Mr. Chambers, B.C.L., was to preach. He asked me to go, but as I was attired in my week day feathers, I declined with my benediction.

M. E. Church Conference.

The thirty-seventh annual session of the Bay of Quinte Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Canada was opened on Thursday at Kingston. The Kingston News in its remarks on the opening of the Conference said that the three conferences of the body in Canada, number in membership about 26,000, with 300 ministers. It has one University, Albert College, Belleville, and a Ladies' College, St. Thomas. The Bay of Quinte Conference is divided into three districts—Ottawa, Picton, and Kingston. The latter was formerly the Napanee District, but when the new Church was built at Kingston it was resolved to make it the centre of the work, which extends as far east as Brockville and west to Napanee.

At ten o'clock Bishop Carman opened the proceedings by reading 1st John, iv. and v., after which the Revs. J. A. Rogers, F. B. Stratton and R. M. Pope led in prayer.

The attendance of ministers was good, and after calling the roll Bishop Carman proceeded to address the conference. He said they would no doubt be glad to hear from the other conferences that there was a decided increase of membership, notwithstanding wonderful depletion by removals. In Niagara Conference the increase was 161, while in Ontario there was a an increase of 86. The removals were very numerous, over 1,000 persons removing from Niagara alone. The increase was not attributable to any undue swelling of the list, for this would operate on the assessments. On the whole they had every reason to give glory to God. Then he closed by urging upon them the necessity of courtesy in their dealing in their dealing with each other during the session of conference. The address was well received.

Rev. W. Blair was elected secretary.

The Rev. F. B. Chisholm was appointed Journal Secretary and Rev. W. Barnett, Statistical Secretary.

The conference sermon was preached on Thursday afternoon by the Rev. W. Blair. In the evening the Revs. Dr. Aylesworth and Prof. Badgley were to speak on Modern Skepticism.

The following is a list of the active ministers in the Conference, most of whom are present: J. H. Andrews, Shannonville; J. W. Andrews, Inverary; B. F. Austin, B.A., Prescott; A. E. Bethany Festival.

After having an addition of a new spire, gallery, altar and undergoing various repairs, the Bethany M. E. church, opposite Mill Point, held the "hen festival," as announced. The attendance was good, and the edibles consisted of fowls prepared in every style—roasted, stewed, stuffed, fried, hashed, hot and cold, with "side dishes" of pie and cake. After refreshments, speeches were the order. Mr. Gale occupied the chair, and speeches were made by Messrs. Woodcock, Lewis, Andrews, Clark, Lyman and Rev. Mr. Bell. Then followed a "bran pie," which created considerable amusement. An investment of half a dime entitled one to a draw from a number of sacks in a tub, covered with bran, a string attached to each sack protruding above the bran, one of which was selected and the sack drawn out, which in all cases contained some useful article. The proceeds of the entertainment were about $30. S.

Mohawk Mission.

At the annual Easter Vestry Meeting of Christ Church, Tyendinaga, it was resolved unanimously "That in no instance shall permission to be buried in the Mohawk Church Cemeteries be given in the case of persons who have not been members of the Church of England, or who die unbaptized, and for every grave required for a white person, $1.50 be paid in advance."

August Flower.

The immense sale and great popularity of Green's August Flower in all towns and villages in the civilized world has caused many imitators to adopt similar names, expecting to reap a harvest for themselves at the expense of the afflicted. This Medicine was introduced in 1868, and for the cure of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, with their effects, such as Sour Stomach, Costiveness, Sick Stomach, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Palpitation of the Heart, vertigo, etc., etc., it has never failed to our knowledge. dark, and Mr. Cochrane had [illegible] the end of his cigar.

"She can't be very young, anyhow," he remarked, presently.

"If you mean Miss Savage, she's about three-and-twenty," replied Lancelot Brackenbury.

"So young?"

"She is just ten years younger than my brother, and poor Cuthbert would now be thirty-three. How these dogs bark! Do you hear anything on the road?"

"I fancied I did just now; but not— Yes, surely I hear wheels."

They stood listening. The dogs barked again, and the sound of a rapidly approaching vehicle became distinctly audible.

"A dropper-in," said Mr. Cochrane.

"Droppers-in, my dear fellow, are as rare at Old Court as on Robinson Crusoe's island," laughed his host. "You forget that we are nine miles from everywhere, and that old Miss Langtrey is our nearest neighbor. I wonder who it is? Let's go round to the gate and see."

They went round, crossing a paved yard that opened upon a lane. The yard dog, echoed by those in the kennels, was straining at his chain and barking furiously. The kitchen windows gave out a ruddy glow, and a groom with a lantern was peering from the stable door. Presently, like a pair of demon eyes, two lights flashed out of the darkness at the end of the lane, blazed nearer and larger, and resolved themselves into a pair of gig lamps at the heads of a tall, raw-boned gray, which pulled up at the gate.

"Hollo, James!" shouted a cheery voice. "Mind her head, my lad! Master at home?"

"At home, and delighted to see you," replied Mr. Brackenbury, holding open the gate. "What good wind blows you to these undiscovered shores? Singleton market day? How kind of you to come round this way! You found the road pretty rough, I am afraid. Now, then, mind the step. Allow me to introduce Mr. Cochrane. Cochrane, this is my old friend Mr. Marrables, about whom I was talking yesterday."

CHAPTER XV.

[illegible] YIELDS TO THE FORCE OF CIRCUMSTANCES.

Mr. Marrables was a bright, chatty little old man, with a cheerful voice, a pleasant smile, and scant crisp white hair brushed up in a curly ridge along the top of his head, like a cock's comb. Sitting at the foot of the dinner table that evening, so plump, so rosy, so trim, in tightly buttoned frock coat, high velvet collar, and ample shirt frill, he looked like a dapper old cherub.

Mr. Marrables, however, was not a cherub. He was the Brackenburys' family lawyer, and the last surviving partner of that old firm which had carried their cause through the famous lawsuit.

"Dullness," he was saying, "is a relative term. For myself, being neither painter nor sportsman, I should probably die here of ennui. But then, you see, I am a lawyer, and lawyers are nothing if not gregarious. We should break our hearts in Utopia. You know why Lord Chief Justice Parnell said that lawyers might as well be rogues in this world—because they wouldn't care to go to a heaven where there was neither marrying nor dying, and consequently neither disputed wills nor breaches of promise. Profane, eh? But Parnell's jokes were as profane as a parson's. He had a Socratic way of questioning witnesses on points of law when he was at the Bar—what he called extracting pure equity from their inner consciousness. He [illegible] poser answers sometimes. 'What is [illegible] unlawful?' he once asked a rustic at Singleton Assizes. 'Well, master,' replied Chawbacon, 'because, according to the Scripture, a man cannot serve two masters.' But you were talking about the delights and dullness of a country life. I can see what these moors are—positively alive with game at this season. The hunting, however, is not convenient. The hounds never meet nearer than Danesbridge or Newton Bottom, both twelve or fourteen miles distant, and you can't send your horses in advance, because there is nowhere to put them up. So, Lancelot, [illegible] hunt now. One is too old for that sort of thing at seventy five. Not look it, eh? Well, perhaps not. Lucky for us that we don't score a furrow for every year, like some of the cactuses at Kew. By the way, Mr. Cochrane, if you are anything of a botanist or archæologist, you will find plenty to interest you here besides partridges and pheasants. These moors abound in rare varieties of ferns and mosses, and as for prehistoric antiquities, dolmens, and so on, they are as plentiful as blackberries. You have not yet seen the Bride Stones or the Witches' Round? Why, they are the lions of Brackenbury! The Witches' Round is a fine circle of fifteen monoliths, eleven of which are still upright, supposed to be fifteen young witches whom Joseph of Arimathea caught dancing by moonlight, and he very unkindly turned them into stones. There is one night in the year—St. John's Eve, I think—when at the stroke of midnight they become witches again and dance for an hour. Fact, I assure you. All our country folk swear to it; and what everyone says must be true. What is this—port? Not the yellow seal, Church?"

"The yellow seal, Mr. Marrables," replied Mr. Brackenbury's butler, a stately personage who had been in the family for nearly half a century. "We never give [illegible] any other, sir."

"'Pon my life, I am ashamed—positively ashamed! [illegible] this is something like port! There's not such another glass of wine in this county. Your grandfather bought it with old Sixsmythe's whole cellar, at my suggestion, Mr. Brackenbury—six dozen in all, and every bottle of the choicest. He used to tell me I never did him a better turn. Regular old-fashioned three-bottle man, that Sir [illegible]. Kept this particular port for his own drinking. Never gave it to his guests if he could help it. I used to ask for it, out of malice—pure malice. He couldn't refuse, you know, but grudged every drop. Drank himself across the Styx, poor devil! Crosby warned him of it—tried to cut him down to one bottle a-day; but 'twas of no use. 'I don't ask you to drop it altogether, Mr. [illegible],' says Crosby, 'but you must leave off drinking it in a great measure.' [illegible] promised. Crosby, however, timed his next visit after dinner, and found the patient [illegible] his third bottle. 'I've not broken my word, doctor,' says Belcombe. 'I promised I would leave off drinking it in a great measure.' And, by Jove! sir, he was tippling it in [illegible] glasses!—What! both you young men sticking to the claret jug? Fie! 'Claret for boys,' you know; 'port for men; brandy for heroes.' 'Pon my life, now, it spoils my pleasure not to pass the bottle."

"I fear you must vanquish it alone this time, Mr. Marrables," said Lancelot Brackenbury.

"The gods forbid! No, my dear friend, I must keep my head cool, for, to tell you the truth, I am not here to-night for the sole pleasure of dining with you all [illegible]. I am going to beg for ten minutes' chat by-and-by on some little matters of business."

Old Court was but a bachelor's den, after all, and boasted of no third room; so, when they had taken their coffee, host and guests adjourned to the studio.

"I will leave you now to your business talk," said Cochrane, when he had chatted for a minute or two, and twisted up his cigarette. "You'll find me in the dining room when you want me."

But this [illegible] Lancelot Brackenbury would by no means allow.

"My business transactions are simple enough," he said. "We have no secrets to discuss. I am but a steward, you know, isn't it so, Marrables?"

The little lawyer coughed doubtfully.

"I have nothing to say that Mr. Cochrane is not welcome to hear," he replied.

"But I am de trop," urged he of the War and Water Department.

"Not a bit of it, sir—not a bit of it. Mr. Brackenbury says truly; we have no secrets."

So [illegible] to a far corner, with a book and a reading lamp; while the man of law brought out his papers, dropped his cheery, chirruping manner, and settled down to business.

"First of all, there is that question of the right of way through Crawford Spinney. My partner and I have gone into it from every point of view, and with no better result. In the absence of any assertion of [illegible] right on your part, we are powerless to stop the traffic."

"It's a horrible nuisance," said Mr. Brackenbury.

"It is not only a nuisance, but an aggravated form of trespass. [illegible] short-cut to your preserves on that side, and offers a direct temptation to tramps. Then the worse of it is, the longer it goes on, the more it [illegible] the more difficult, therefore, will it be to put a stop to it by-and-by."

"But can you do nothing by [illegible]?"

"Nothing whatever. And now—let me see. Ah! yes—now about those leases, Lawrence's and Bell's. Lawrence's, as you know, expired about nine months ago, and Bell's has [illegible] close upon two years. Bell [illegible] me again yesterday, and was very urgent about it."

"You have explained the difficulty to them, of course?"

"Yes; that is to say, I have told them what [illegible] and think upon the subject; but they do not appreciate your scruples."

"They are a pair of ignorant boors," said Mr. Brackenbury, emphatically.

"No, no, my dear friend; they are both very worthy, respectable men—men whose forbears have leased their holdings from your predecessors for generations, and who object—reasonably enough—to being placed in the position of yearly tenants. Look at Bell, for instance—a really surprising piece of farming, willing to put money into the land, but held back by uncertainty of his present position. Told me that he proposed going largely into guano and patent manures, if only his lease were renewed in proper form. Meanwhile the land suffers as well as the farmer."

"Heavens and earth, does the man take us for thieves?" exclaimed Mr. Brackenbury. "He ought to know that he is as safe as if he had his lease signed, sealed, and in his own strong-box."

The little lawyer smiled grimly.

"You are dreadfully unpractical," he replied. "You forget that a lease is property, and that Bell has a family to provide for. He is as good a tenant as ever tilled the soil, and he deserves good treatment."

"Good treatment! Who dreams of treating him ill? Does he think he is to be tempted into sinking his money, only to find his rent raised immediately after? It's a downright insult."

"Nothing of the kind. Bell is right, and Mr. Brackenbury is wrong. Suppose, now, you were to die suddenly. This property would go to the Scotch branch, and your successor, if I am not mistaken, is just the man to grasp at any opportunity of raising his rents."

"Thank you, Marrables," said Mr. Brackenbury. "It's a pleasing suggestion, but I'm not going to die just yet."

"God forbid! I only put the case to show you that these men are not—excuse me!—are not being fairly dealt by."

"Confound it all! How can I help it? What am I do?"

"Nothing—except one thing."

"Which I will not do—as you well know."

Mr. Marrables shrugged his shoulders.

"I thought it was understood that I entirely rejected that ultimatum," continued Mr. Brackenbury, with some heat of manner. "I did not suppose you would return to it," said the lawyer.

"As for Bell, and Lawrence, and the rest of them, they must wait—as I am waiting. And if they won't wait, they may go to the devil, leases and all!"

Mr. Marrables stroked his chin contemplatively. "And the property," he added. "Don't forget that. The property goes to the devil likewise, you know."

Mr. Brackenbury muttered something about "letting it go, and welcome," thrust his hands into his pockets, and glared at the fire.

"Lancelot Brackenbury," said Mr. Marrables, with much suavity, "you are the most obstinate and the most unreasonable young man I ever had the pleasure of knowing. Nevertheless, I have a last word to say about the legacies."

An impatient movement on the part of his client.

"It has probably not occurred to you that, by not proving your brother's will you are year by year keeping a number of persons out of their just dues."

Mr. Brackenbury made no reply.

"It may be argued that so long as they know nothing about it they are not aggrieved—but is it fair to keep them in ignorance? How can you tell that some of the older and poorer legatees may not die before coming into possession of their money?"

"I have thought of that," said the young man, in a low voice. "I have taken care that none of the really poor shall lose by the delay. Joe Howell, the two Dodds, old Lois Bailey, and lots of others have had their tens and twenties, just the same."

"The deuce they have—on what grounds? As a gift from yourself?"

"Well, yes, partly. I said I knew it was what Cuthbert wished."

"Humph! I suppose you know you'll be liable to pay it all over again, when you prove the will?"

"I thought it likely. But what does it matter?—a few hundreds more or less."

Mr. Marrables shook his head, and tried to look as if he disapproved.

"Very foolish!" he said. "Very foolish, and one sided, and altogether out of rule. Besides, how can you tell that some of the larger legatees may not want their money quite as much as the Dodds and the Baileys? Miss Winnifred Savage, for instance. She ought to be paid."

"If I know anything of Miss Savage's character and disposition," said Mr. Brackenbury, warmly, "she is the last who would desire to profit by my poor brother's will."

"I don't doubt it—so far as she is herself concerned; but I was thinking of old Miss Langtrey. Are you aware that the Grange is mortgaged, and the mortgage about to be foreclosed?"

"Mortgaged? By whom? By Miss Langtrey?"

He spoke quickly. He was evidently startled.

"By the late squire. He mortgaged it for five thousand, a month or so before his death."

"Do you know the mortgagee?"

"John Fawcett."

"Fawcett of Singleton—the well known solicitor?"

"Ay—the original mortgagee being Frank Fawcett, his nephew, now a junior partner. Frank Fawcett, however, transferred the mortgage to his uncle some years ago. But we may be pretty sure that it was the older Fawcett's money from the first, and that it has been long since paid, with the Lord knows how many more thousands, in the form of costs."

"Heavens! What an infamy!"

Mr. Marrables smiled blandly.

"Clever practice, my young friend," said he.

"Miss Langtrey must not lose the Grange!" exclaimed Mr. Brackenbury, emphatically.

"How do you propose to prevent it?"

"By paying off the mortgage immediately. It is what Cuthbert would do if he were here."

"It is what he would have a right to do—which you have not."

"But I will do it for him—with his money."

"Stop! neither you nor any one else is supposed to know that the Grange is encumbered. It is a matter that has been kept strictly private. Besides, if Miss Langtrey does not take you into her confidence, how can you perform the part of a Deus ex machina, descending upon the stage with a money-bag in one hand and a cancelled deed in the other?"

"If you knew of the mortgage, why may not I know of it?"

"Because I learned it from an engrossing clerk, who would be ruined if his name leaked out. You can not act on the information."

Mr. Brackenbury half rose from his chair.

"My innocent Marrables," he said, angrily, "you delight to raise obstacles. If Fawcett forecloses, the place will be put up for sale, and we can buy it in. Or you might go to Fawcett & Clarke, and say that I wish to arrange the matter privately. The thing can be managed, and if well managed, Miss Langtrey need not even be told that I am in it."

Mr. Marrables listened with provoking calmness.

"My dear young friend," he said, "you theorize with the refreshing impulsiveness of youth. The place will not be put up for sale. The mortgagee will take the estate in liquidation of the debt, and an excellent bargain he will make of it. [illegible] Fawcett [illegible] the Grange [illegible]. As for [illegible] Miss Langtrey's favor, you might as well propose to arrange privately for the settlement of the national debt. It is simply a case of Langtrey versus Shylock. Shylock is [illegible]; and though you should offer him a dozen beefsteaks in exchange, he prefers his pound of flesh."

"But there must be a way out of it?"

"Undoubtedly there is a way out of it. Prove your brother's will, and pay Miss Winifred Savage's legacy of twelve thousand pounds."

Mr. Brackenbury moved uneasily in his chair, and shaded his face with his hand.

"I must have time," he said, presently—"time to consider."

"You have taken four years to consider already," said Mr. Marrables.

Tea was brought, and after tea, the spirit decanters and cigar boxes. Mr. Cochrane laid down his book; and the little lawyer, dropping his professional manner, chirrupped and chattered away as before. But Lancelot Brackenbury went out for a solitary walk on the terrace.

When, after about half an hour's absence, he came back, it was with a very grave and somewhat pale face.

"[illegible]," [illegible] "I will do [illegible] you say so."

"I do it against my inclination—against my judgment. But I yield to circumstances. God forgive me if I do wrong!"

"Believe me, you do only what is just. And now—for we must act promptly—you had better meet me in Singleton to-morrow morning, and I'll have the affidavits ready. What o'clock shall we say? Eleven?"

The young man nodded gloomily.

"Very good—eleven. And now I must be going home. No, no—don't ask me. I would stay if I could—only too gladly. But [illegible] office to-morrow morning at nine, and another at half past, and it will run me pretty sharp to be ready for you by eleven. May I order my trap?"

"By all means; but it's sheer insanity to turn out for a fourteen miles' drive at this hour. You can't see a yard before you."

"Oh! that's nothing," said Mr. Marrables, putting out his hand to the bell. "The mare knows her way, and sees in the dark like a cat."

The solemn butler appeared.

"Bid James put the mare in, Church, and bring the trap round."

The order was so unusual that Church looked at his master, to see if anything was wrong.

"We've got your room ready, sir," he said, hesitatingly.

"All the worse for me, Church, that I can't occupy it to-night. Just tell James to be as quick as he can, will you?"

"Yes, sir."

"And look here, Church—my lord will kindly lend me an extra rug till to-morrow."

The faintest gleam of intelligence flashed over Church's monumental countenance; but Lancelot Brackenbury looked down, and said nothing.

Mr. Marrables had carried his point.

CHAPTER XVI.

[illegible]

Horace Cochrane was one of the discreetest of men. He said nothing till questioned, and even then he committed himself as little as possible. His friend took it for granted that he had heard both sides of the question, and asked what he thought of it, to which Mr. Cochrane replied that, although he had done his best not to listen, he could not help hearing something of the discussion; and that from what little he did hear, it seemed to him that Mr Marrables was right. He did not say how much that little was, nor did Lancelot ask him.

Now he had in truth tried hard not to hear, and although he was by no means in a reading mood, he did, somehow or another, succeed in abstracting his mind from the conversation, till the name of Miss Winifred Savage arrested his attention. That name, spoken by Mr. Marrables with peculiar emphasis, took his ear by surprise, and for a moment he caught himself listening to what followed. After this, do what he would, he could not again deafen himself to what was going on. He heard all about the mortgage, and all about the legacy that Lord Brackenbury had left to his intended bride. There could be no doubt that these were exceedingly private matters, and that he had no business to know anything about them, but it was not his fault that they were discussed in his presence, or that he had involuntarily heard what was said.

The two young men rode over to Singleton early next morning, where they put up for a couple of hours at the Three Feathers—an old-fashioned inn and posting house overlooking the market place. Mr Cochrane then strolled out to see the town, while Lancelot Brackenbury, who should now be called Lord Brackenbury, transacted his business with Mr. Marrables.

There is not much to interest a stranger in the clean, commonplace, sleepy streets of this North Country town. Mr. Cochrane, however, went over to the Abbey Church, tried in vain to decipher the half-effaced legend on the market cross, inspected some fragments of Roman wall in a meadow outside the town, and it barely consuming half an hour of the time he had to wait, came back to the Three Feathers, took refuge in a warm corner of the coffee room, and solaced himself with reading the newspapers.

They were to have luncheon presently, when Lancelot's business was done, and they were to ride home by way of Langtrey Manor, so passing [illegible] the Grange.

Most people suppose that the manufacture of tobacco consists merely of taking the leaf and pressing it into plugs. The fact is, however, that the process is a very delicate one, and the least false step will injure the flavor. The leaf must be carefully attended to for months after it leaves the planter's hands. It must neither dry too quickly nor too slowly. Even after it has reached the factory the utmost delicacy of manipulation is required. The weather must be carefully studied, for if there is too much moisture in the air when it is pressed it will mould, and the same will happen if too much moisture is sprinkled upon it for the purpose of opening the leaf. Again, if it is overdried in the oven it will turn crisp, and will nip the tongue in smoking. It is by careful attention to all these points that the "Myrtle Navy" has been brought to such perfection. The firm who manufacture it have their own storehouses in Virginia, and from the time the leaf leaves the planter's hands until it is turned out of the factory, months afterwards, in plugs, it is under the care of their skilled and trusted employees.

HOUSE CLEANING SEASON IS NOW AT HAND,

[illegible]

and the principal topic of conversation in all well regulated households is, How to make the best disposition of Carpets, Curtains, etc., with a view to adornment as well as comfort and Economy? After this is arranged, then comes the question, Which of the rooms will we buy the next Carpet for? After this is decided, the most important question of all remains,

WHERE WILL WE BUY THEM?

We can easily help you to decide this question. The firm that sells the most carpets is the best house to buy your carpets from, for the reason, that their stock is always being turned over, and the newest patterns in the trade are being shown as they come out. Another reason is, that they can buy cheaper than a house that sells a very few carpets, and then, if they pay cash and sell cheap for cash, no other house can compete with them.

We offer all these advantages to all intending purchasers, as every person who has seen our stock can testify.

We have sold enough carpets since we opened to make a respectable wholesale trade.

It is no exageration to say that no house between Toronto and Montreal can excel us in these departments. We have sold plenty of carpets to customers from Belleville and Kingston, and have sold and sent carpets to customers above Toronto.

We have now carpets on sale at lower prices retail than any house in Canada can buy at wholesale. Be sure to examine our stock and prices before buying elsewhere. We consider it no trouble to show our stock—we take pleasure in doing so, whether customers buy or not.

The day has gone by when a business can be built up by misrepresentation, Jewing or trickery. The firm who will deal honorably with all men, and give the best value for the money, will do the best business and the most durable one. Leaving immorality out of the question, the business man who deliberately lies to a customer is both a knave and a fool. For our part, we do not desire a business built upon such sandy foundations. We neither misrepresent our goods by advertising nor permit it to be done by our salesmen.

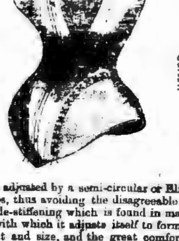
HEADQUARTERS FOR CORSETS.

We herewith present you with a cut of a New Corset, which we think is destined to become very popular,



Recommended to us as a perfect adjustable fit, very attractive,

And represented to us as a very Durable Corset.

This corset is adjusted by a semi-circular or Eliptical lacing over the hips, thus avoiding the disagreeable and sometimes painful side-stiffening which is found in many corsets.

The facility with which it adjusts itself to forms of different development and size, and the great comfort and ease with which it may be worn, enables the figure to be displayed to much greater advantage, and cannot but prove a valuable acquisition to the most perfect toilet.

The improved system of lacing employed in the Semi-circular Adjustable Hip Corset prevents the wear and tear to which other kinds are so liable, and as the wearing strains are equalized and distributed over the entire Corset, they will be found to outlast most of the ordinary style of Corsets in present use.

We have also full lines of Crompton's corsets in the different makes so well and favorably known to the ladies.
